Philosophy, BA (Boston)

Philosophy is a basic field of inquiry. Its range encompasses ideas and issues in every domain of human experience, and its methods apply to problems of an unlimited variety. The major in philosophy can develop not only philosophical skill and sophistication but also critical thinking and writing abilities that are readily applicable to pursuits in other academic areas, useful in careers far removed from philosophy, and valuable in everyday social and personal life. The study of philosophy can profoundly affect both the thinking one does and the kind of person one is.

There are varieties of concentrations of the philosophy major that students may choose from in accordance with their own backgrounds and interests. These include:

· Philosophy major (no concentration)

Offers students a maximum number of electives so they may choose in accordance with their own backgrounds and interests

· Philosophy major with a concentration in law and ethics

Focuses elective coursework in the areas of law, social and political philosophy, and applied ethics

· Philosophy major with a concentration in ethics

Focuses elective coursework in the areas of ethical theory, applied ethics, and social and political philosophy

· Philosophy major with a concentration in religious studies

· Philosophy major with a concentration in formal methods

Combined majors in media and screen studies and philosophy, economics and philosophy, environmental studies and philosophy, political science and philosophy, English and philosophy, history and philosophy, computer science and philosophy, criminal justice and philosophy, and physics
